COURAGEOUS RALLY IS MADE BY POPE; RECEIVES PACELLI

Sees Papal Secretary Shortly After Dispensing With Oxygen Tent

ATTENDANTS AMAZED

Extreme Unction Had Been Administered at Pope's Own Request

By Frank Gervasi
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
(Copyright, 1938)

VATICAN CITY, Nov. 26—(INS)—Stout-hearted and courageous after a pain-racked night, Pope Pius rose from his sick-bed today for a brief period.

Turning aside the remonstrances of his physicians and aides, the 81-year-old Pontiff, who yesterday suffered a heart attack that nearly ended his life, insisted upon being taken to his private library.

There he received Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli for a brief audience.

His Holiness received the Papal Secretary of State less than an hour after dispensing with the oxygen tent, in which he was placed yesterday, and being placed in a movable bed.

After this change was made, Pius stubbornly commanded that he be taken to the private library on the floor below his sick room so that he might talk with Cardinal Pacelli, one of his most noted aides.

When a high prelate in the papal entourage demurred, saying, "You must be careful," the Holy Father replied curtly:

"Better a vacant chair than a Pope who does not fulfill the functions of a Pope."

Previously a bulletin had been issued at 11.45 a. m. which concealed the discomfort the Pope must have experienced.

This announcement stated:—

"The Holy Father passed a tranquil night without undue disturbance. The betterment at which we have already hinted happily continues—so much so that his holiness has returned to a mode of life more or less normal."

The Pontiff's personal physician, Dr. Amintore Milani, however, counseled some days of complete rest for Pius before he resumes his habitual tasks.

In addition, it was learned that the Pope himself virtually dictated the medical bulletin to Cardinal Pacelli, who communicated it to the Papal Secretariat.

Such was the manner in which the stout-hearted Pontiff sought to thrust aside his illness and continue his fight for life with the same tenacity and grit that enabled him to conquer the prowling Matterhorn in his Alpinist days.

Before the medical bulletin was issued in words of the Pope's own careful choosing, Vatican officials described his condition in cold clinical language. They declared:

"The Holy Father is relatively comfortable."

VATICAN CITY, Nov. 26—(INS)—Pope Pius XI, displaying the tenacious will power that carried him through two previous major illnesses, today appeared to be rallying from the severe heart attack which once again brought him close to death.

This morning Vatican authorities revealed that the stricken Pontiff, who was placed in an oxygen tent to preserve his life, had passed a quiet night. They added that his general condition was as "satisfactory" as could be expected under the circumstances.

It was learned that the Holy Father, who was placed in the oxygen tent shortly after suffering the attack yesterday morning, would continue to receive this treatment until his physicians consider him sufficiently recovered to breathe normal air.

Officials at the Vatican also revealed that circulatory blood complications had attended the falling of the Pontiff's heart and that his condition was so critical that extreme unction was administered at his own request.

Mr. Lawrence was found in the Parkland Fire Company station, in an unconscious condition on Wednesday of last week. CALLS ANNEXATION FAVORABLE TO HITLER

Taking of Sudetenland Called Another Step Toward Nazi Domination of Europe

TO CONTINUE POLICY

By International News Service

PARIS, Nov. 26—(INS)—Germany's annexation of the Sudeten areas is "just one more step" along Adolf Hitler's road to the complete domination of Europe according to Dr. Donald A. Lowrie, Director of the American Foundation at University City here.

In making this remark during a speech delivered at the weekly luncheon of the University Club, Dr. Lowrie based it upon his eight years' experience as an educator in Czechoslovakia and upon a recent two months' visit in that country.

The educator stated that anyone who read "Mein Kampf" and studied the propaganda and speeches of Nazi leaders, must reach the conclusion that Herr Hitler would continue his policy of expansion.

He devoted a great part of his talk to refuting the charges that the Sudetens were an "oppressed minority."

"The Germans had their own schools and universities," he said. "There were 106 German children in educational unit compared with 115 Czechs."

Speculators Anxious To Unload Tickets for Game

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 26—(INS)—Ticket speculators were making frantic, last-minute efforts to unload whatever pastebords they had left.

The last of 600 snow shovels had cleared the seats and playing field of Municipal Stadium.

Police numbering 1,000 were on special traffic duty; buses, subway trains and trolleys ran on special schedules.

And an army of an estimated 100,000 football fans was on its way to attend the annual Army-Navy game here today.

Cloudy weather and chilling temperatures were the only untoward events threatening to mar Philadelphia's "million dollar party," but compared to last year's game-time weather of driving rain, it was a perfect day.

The weather had the effect, however, of making the attendance figure difficult to hazard and of depressing speculator ticket prices to within comparatively easy reach.

"Plenty" of tickets were reported available, brokers complaining that an unusual flood of pastebords and the weather were forcing them to sell seats at a loss in some cases. Prices ranged from a reported $4 to as high as $20 for the choicest seats.

Meanwhile, hotels, night spots and restaurants prepared to do a rushing business immediately after the game with an estimated "take" of $1,000,000 expected as a result of the week-end.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

(Copyright, 1938, by The Baltimore Sun)

The Risks of Prophecy

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24. AMONG the merriest of our President's White House moods are those in which he can laugh at the press. He dearly loves a joke on the newspaper men who attend his press conferences and he is at his happiest when in his lively way he has put one over on them.

FOR example, many will recall his undisguised glee early in 1937, when his Supreme Court-packing plan was sprung, that not a single newspaper man in Washington had so much as suspected that any such scheme existed until it was formally announced. Perhaps it would have been better for the President had something of his purpose leaked out before he became too deeply committed, because it is quite certain after it was made public that he got no enjoyment out of the proposal at all. However, he has not changed. His pleasure in surprising the newspaper men with announcements of things he intends to do which they failed to anticipate is only equalled by his dislike for having the newspapers anticipate the things he intends to do. When they do that, the Presidential inclination always is to prove them wrong.

IF IT were not for this not-altogether-endearing trait, it would be easy to assert with complete confidence that soon after Congress meets—or possibly, even before—he will announce two major appointments.

For Justice of the Supreme Court—Dr. Felix Frankfurter.

For Attorney General—Mr. Robert H. Jackson.

The chief reason for uncertainty about these Presidential selections is that they have been so

Travel Club Follows Films of Airplane Journey To Beauty Spots

IS A TEA MEETING

Following by eye, motion pictures of airplane travel, the members of the Travel Club were given a treat through courtesy of the Philadelphia Electric Company, yesterday, when they were enabled to witness the beauties and unusual sights of Central and South America.

Through the magic of the camera they were taken in fancy to Miami, the Panama Canal Zone, down the Western coast of South America to Santiago, Chili, then across the mighty Andes, traversing the Andes in three-quarters of an hour, where formerly three weeks was required afoot or long hours by train, the flight of the giant planes was eagerly watched, as the beauties of the terrain beneath unfolded, with brief stops at intermediate points giving glimpses of life typical of the South American countries.

The motion picture flight trail ended at cosmopolitan Buenos Aires, the travelers being shown as they, with every comfort aloft, enjoyed the results of years of tireless effort on the part of scientists, mechanics, technicians, and others.

The animals, foreign to these parts, were included in the films. Hamas, sea lions, and birds of the Southern seas being included. The mighty snow-capped peaks, belching volcanoes, rugged foothills and mountains, farmlands, the gorgeous flowers of the Southern hemisphere, the deserts, the lake country, the herds on ranches of the Pampas—all were viewed eagerly by club women who wished the privilege of such a journey might be theirs.

The film was briefly explained previous to its showing by Mrs. Haines, who represented the Philadelphia Electric Company, and who had been introduced by Mrs. Charles H. Peet.

Mrs. Earl H. Tomb requested Mrs. William DuHamel to present the highlights of the conference on the Cause and Cure of War held last week in Jenkintown. Mrs. DuHamel, in vivid terms brought out the main points of the conference addresses, stressing particularly Miss Gertrude Ely's experiences while visiting recently in Austria. The joyous sensation of freedom felt by this woman when she set foot on United States soil was told of, after experiences of suppression noted in Europe. The glorious heritage of Americans was vividly presented by Mrs. DuHamel, who also spoke of the Lima Conference soon to be held, which is aimed at a firmer friendship between countries of North and South America.

The club president, Mrs. Tomb, requested Miss Frances H. Landreth, Mrs. Armand V. Morris and Mrs. Ernest Lawrence, Jr., to present at the next meeting names of Philadelphia women, who are serving humanity well, and whom the local members wish to nominate for the annual Glimel award. The names will be voted upon at the next session.

Mrs. James LaRue announced the card party which the club will sponsor in the club home on December 5th, with Mrs. Frank Lehman as chairman.

The records were in charge of Mrs. Harry Neher.

Tea was served to those gathered. The hostesses for the day were Mrs. Harry Pope and Mrs. Walter A. Fagan, the committee named including: Miss Julia B. Abbott, Mrs. Lewis J. Bevan, Mrs. Mulford Callahan, Miss Frances Landreth, Mrs. Sidney D. Longbottom, Mrs. Clara Miller, Mrs. Charles I. Bowen, and Mrs. Horace H. Burton.

CHRISTMAS CLUB TOTALS HERE TOP THOSE OF YEAR '37

Value of Checks From Two Bristol Banks is Given at $120,451

3,674 CHECKS MAILED

Trust Company Total is $55,808; Farmers Bank is $64,643.50

Topping last year's Christmas Club totals by about $2,393, the two Bristol banks are today mailing out checks valued in the aggregate at $120,451.

The checks mailed for the Christmas season of 1937 were worth $118,058, the comparison showing that more people are benefiting through this easy method of saving for the holiday season of the year.

One year ago there were 3,405 Christmas Club checks mailed out by the two banking institutions, and the total for 1938 is 3,674. Thus the holiday funds are distributed to 268 more people who have taken advantage of a systematic method of saving.

The sum of the checks mailed today from the banking institution of the Bristol Trust Company is $55,808, as compared to $53,500 last year.

This sum of $55,808 is divided into 1,624 checks, the smallest sum being $12.50 and the largest $2,000. The one check for the latter amount is mailed to a Bristol resident.

To Sanderson, Texas, is one check being mailed, this going a greater distance than any others.

The total of the 2,050 checks of the Farmers National Bank is $64,643.50, as against $64,558.75 twelve months ago. The largest check in this group is for $250 and the smallest for $12.50.

To the State of Washington, to Virginia, New Jersey, New York, and various towns and cities throughout the State of Pennsylvania are these helpful checks being sent.

The date of the new clubs for the two banks is December 5th, although both are already opened, with numerous individuals having already made their initial payments.

To Bristol business will benefit from this saving pass, as well as benefits being received by the savers. It is anticipated that the greater portion will be spent in Bristol stores for holiday gift purchases, while many will deposit portions of their checks in savings funds, in anticipation of future needs.

The greater number of checks will reach the savers on Monday.

Advise Early Purchase And Use of X'mas Seals

"Buy Christmas Seals now and use them early," said the Bucks County Tuberculosis Society who expressed the hope today that the majority of the people to whom Seals are sent will buy them.

"It is often necessary for the Christmas Seal Committee to guess at the number of Seals people want. Some people may wish more than the number sent them, and the Committee will be glad to send the additional sheets. Those who are not able to buy all or part of the Seals they receive are asked to return the unwanted number to headquarters.

"The method of selling Christmas Seals through the mail simplifies their distribution and purchase. The addressed return envelope enables the purchase of Seals with almost no trouble at all. We feel that it is the most convenient way to conduct the Seal Sale.

"The Christmas Seal gives every person an opportunity to participate in continuing and expanding the fight against one of the world's most devastating enemies. The anti-tuberculosis program and its needs are so closely related to the Christmas Seal sale that they cannot be divorced.

"The need for a successful Seal Sale is apparent as we study the health work we hope to undertake next year. The public has never failed to cooperate. We are sure it will not fail in 1938."

EVERYBODY'S PARADE

There is a great disposition among people to get the most out of life, and it is a lucky thing for them that they are never called on to definitize the comprehension of their desires, for they are seeking a complex answer to a vague need rather than finding themselves in the expression of a healthy want. It has often been said that life is an adventure, but many persons miss it inevitably because they look only for the highlights of living and thus their living becomes subjective.

There are no disproportions in life that positively prevent that larger expression of self, which is really living. Even those who are dying gamely and sacrificing wholeheartedly are more alive than the roundly inhibited. Age can be more youthful than youth that misses the shining moment that is life. Thus from Livingston, Montana, comes the story of two women over 60 years old who hitch-hiked their way to Washington and back. Their primary objective—which was to see the president—failed; but their principal objective expressed, in terms of doing something succeeded splendidly. To their dying day, they will not get over the thrill of their strange adventure.

Many self-centered individuals who want to get something out of life, fail to realize that life is a gallant procession that should be joined rather than watched. For those who only watch, the procession is always past. To live really means to do something real. That is the simple essence of the adventure.

IT BENEFITS ALL

Where is there a man with senses so dull he cannot derive supreme satisfaction from the sight of sidewalks and stores jammed with Christmas shoppers? There is none.

Nothing so pleases the merchant for he measures his own prosperity by the size of the shopping crowd. But it is not only the business man who can take satisfaction in the congested stores and streets which mark this particular season of the year. To the factory worker these crowds mean employment and good wages. To the citizen of any community these crowds mean prosperity for his home town or city. To society these crowds mean peace and the lightning of the burden placed upon society by the dependent.

One thing most Christmas-gift buyers overlook is that the gift benefits not alone the recipient. The Christmas shopper is placing capital at the command of industry and business, giving employment to labor and giving to the community its very life's blood—business. Recognition of this fact makes even easier and pre-Christmas conversion of hoarded dollars into gifts.

Like a boomerang, the money society spends for its Christmas shopping comes back to it. From producer to consumer to producer again—and all men are producers with their capital or their labor.

A new hunt for the Missing Link is on, in Java. In time, biology hopes to establish a connection between the new Caesar type and man.

"Mussolini demands that France end its alliance with Russia." More and more one has a feeling that the Duce has fallen behind the news.

The Great Game of Politics

widely forecast by the newspapers. Those who know the President best agree that one way of preventing him from doing a thing is to publicly prophesy that that is what he is going to do.

IN THESE two cases, however, the reasons seem weighty enough to overcome the distaste of Mr. Roosevelt for having his actions accurately predicted in the press. So far as Dr. Frankfurter is concerned, but one excuse for not appointing him has been suggested—to wit, that he is a Jew. Some of his coreligionists, it is said, have urged upon Mr. Roosevelt that to name him might increase anti-Semitic feeling in the country. This is so unsound as well as so unworthy an idea that no one believes Mr. Roosevelt will let it influence him for a minute. The fact is Dr. Frankfurter's qualifications as a lawyer and a man are generally recognized and his being a Jew would no more add to anti-Semitism in this country than does the fact that Justice Brandeis is a Jew—or Governor Lehman of New York or Governor Horner of Illinois.

AS for Mr. Jackson, to name him Attorney General is so logical as to be almost inescapable. He is at present Solicitor General. Before that he was Assistant Attorney General, and he is close to the President personally. It would be a natural promotion. Of course, outside the more rarified New Deal circles Mr. Jackson is not popular. His somewhat ridiculous and very brief campaign for the New York gubernatorial nomination tended to make him rather a joke in that State, and the bellicose demagoguery of his speeches have made a generally unfavorable impression. They are applauded by the extremists but not highly regarded by discerning people. His disposition is to consider himself much more heavily endowed with wisdom and virtue than he really is, but then, that is typical of the group to which he belongs.

OFFICIALLY, as well as personally, his White House relations are such that if Mr. Jackson should be passed over and some one else made Attorney General, it would seem a deliberate slap by the President at one of his brightest young men. The fact that he has gone perhaps higher and faster than his mental equipment seems to warrant would make no difference. For one thing, that can be said about so many others here. A very convincing reason for believing the Frankfurter and Jackson appointments are sure is that they have been ardently urged by the Corcoran-Cohen "inner-circle" combination. So far as Dr. Frankfurter is concerned, these palace politicians have set their pure young hearts on his selection. And Mr. Jackson is actually one of them. If both are named there will be great joy in Georgetown. Triumphant times will be played on the accordion and from all the "intellectual liberals" prayers of thanks will go up. The one danger seems to be this intense Presidential dislike for having not especially inspired newspaper writers take the news out of his announcements. That may seem a fantastic apprehension, but those who know Mr. Roosevelt best know it to be a real one.

MY LOVE IS NEW by IRIS BENNETT

SYNOPSIS

Constance Darby is just 20 and terribly in love with young Terry Cannon, assistant athletic coach in an upstate college. In June, on a visit to his home in Northwood, he and Connie plan to marry the following October. For the summer, Terry will act as swimming instructor at a boys' camp and Constance will be secretary to Gordon Keith, well-known newspaper correspondent, radio commentator and ladies' man. As far as Northwood knew, Gordon, its favorite son, had returned to write a book. It did not know that he was ostracized from New York because of a scandal and was also broke. Rosalind Constance's 18-year-old sister, envies the life of luxury enjoyed by the folk who live in that exclusive part of the town called "The Hills." She has been seeing the wealthy playboy, Van Howard. Constance warns her he is not serious and would never marry her. "I'll show you!" Rosalind retorted. "I'll show everybody!" The Monday after Terry left, Constance goes to work for Gordon at the Carter Estate where he is staying. They work on his book all morning and, at noon, while they are lunching in the garden, Avis Bailey, young debutante, drives up in her snappy roadster. "Well, isn't this cozy?" she remarks in sweet sarcasm. Gordon introduces her to Constance and wonders if the Princess of Northwood is jealous of his lovely secretary. He declines her invitation to play tennis that day, but adds he and Constance will take on Van and her some other time. As Gordon escorts Avis to her car, Constance's eyes follow them. She is troubled, thinking of Van and Rosalind. "I won't let myself become involved with these people."

CHAPTER VIII

Like a blue comet, the roadster disappeared and Gordon came back to the table.

"Now to finish my dessert," he said. "Avis thinks that all the world plays because she does. You knew her by sight, didn't you?"

"Everyone in Northwood knows her by sight." Would they fall in love, Gordon and Avis? Would her father approve of her love for a man who had been married and divorced? Many questions raced through her mind, questions that would not be answered until the end of summer. This was more than a job. She had stepped into several lives which would undoubtedly become entangled. And young Rosalind who had sobbed into her pillow last night was probably one of them.

Several days of uninterrupted work passed. At home the problem of Rosalind had taken a new turn. Mrs. Darby, ever wishing for peace in her household, rejoiced at the change in her younger daughter. For Rosalind was docile and obedient. But Constance knew.

She found her sister curled up in a chair in their bedroom one night. Sitting on the dressing table bench, Constance said, "You've been seeing Van Howard every day after school, Rosalind."

The dark eyes blazed. "You've been spying on me! I never thought you would! How did you know?"

"The roadster had a flat tire the other day and I had to take a bus to the Hills. Grace Kelly and I sat together. She knows. All your friends know. I suppose you want them to know."

"Why not? He'd never taken any of them out in his car. They're jealous."

"Your friends know. Soon the Howards will know. Then Mother and Father, I know you're tempted. But think how it will be when he gets tired of you and stops seeing you. And he will. You know his reputation with girls. He gives them a rush and then drops them. I'm only trying to help you."

Rosalind's pretty mouth was distorted in a sneer.

"I don't want your help! I don't want you spying on me!" Lowering her curly head, she drew in her lips. "I love Van and he loves me. He tells me every day he loves me. Before Constance could speak again, she hurried to the door, flung it open, and cried, "I won't listen to you! I won't listen to anybody! I'm old enough to know what I'm doing!"

The next day in the study of the Spanish house, Gordon looked at Constance. Her hand paused on the shorthand pad.

"This isn't about the book," he said. "It's more timely. I happened to drop in at the Howards last night rather inopportunely, it happened. Nina, that's Mrs. Howard, and Van were having quite a scene. Stephen is away on business. It seems, Constance, that you have a very pretty sister."

"She felt a flame in her cheeks. "What—what were they saying about my sister?"

"Perhaps you'd better know something about Van. He isn't a bad sort but he's been spoiled. The only child of rich parents. He wasn't healthy as a child and he's grown up with the idea that everyone should forgive him as easily as his mother has. Nina Howard is a fine woman. She's heard that Van has been seeing quite a lot of your sister."

"And she disapproves," Constance said frankly.

"Yes. But if your sister is anything like you," he said gently, "I think she'd be good for Van. His parents love him but they're disappointed in him." Then he said, "We think because we're older we know so much more. But you're not much older than your sister, are you?"

"I'm twenty. She's eighteen. But I've been working for three years. That makes a difference."

He remembered what Nina Howard had said: "Aren't you ashamed, Van, being seen with a girl from Vine Street? Who is she? Who are her parents? And all the girls here in the Hills, girls from lovely families we've always known..."

He smiled. "I dare say it's nothing serious. Van's in love with a new face every week. But he promised his mother he wouldn't see Rosalind again. Will that be very hard on her?"

"Very, I'm afraid." Poor Rosalind. You could not make the grade, dear. It's the line I told you you could not cross.

A few days later her mother said to her, "Rosalind doesn't go any where anymore. Constance. It isn't natural for a girl to stay to herself so much. Bill called and the Lester boy but she wouldn't see them. I wish you'd talk to her. Sometimes I think she's been crying."

And Constance thought, "Van has kept his promise to his mother and isn't seeing her."

In the darkness of their room that night Constance said, "You're not asleep, Rosalind."

Her voice was thick and choked. "He hasn't been to our meeting place for days. I've been there every day. One day he drove by and didn't—didn't stop. He kept right on going. That—that hurt! It made me feel cheap! I know what everybody says about him but I—I love him and—and it's worse than you know! Oh, I don't want to talk anymore about this."

But her concern for Rosalind grew. If she had feared, "Well, if that's the way he feels, okay. There are plenty of other boys!" Constance would have dismissed it. But Rosalind stayed to herself, took no interest in her new clothes for graduation, and refused to see the boys she knew. Her attitude was completely unlike her.

Sitting opposite Constance beneath the bright umbrella one day at noon Gordon asked, "Will you go over to the club with me this afternoon for a swim? All work and no play, my dear, won't give you a becoming tan."

They had finished luncheon and Gordon was smoking, tapping the ashes on the grass beside the slim white lawn chair. Constance's dress was as honey-colored as her hair.

Many times she had found herself comparing Gordon to Terry. His laughter was as spontaneous as Terry's but his glance was not as direct or as honest. She felt there was much about him no one knew despite his widely publicized career. What secrets lay behind Gordon's roving black eyes? In his book would he mention a marriage that had ended in divorce? With her he was charming and thoughtful and amusing.

Suddenly her mind jerked back to the question she had not answered. He had asked her to go to the club with him this afternoon for a swim.

"Thank you, but I don't have a bathing suit," she said and smiled. "I don't carry one with me."

"Is that why you hesitated? Well, we can fix that. Avis will be there and I'm sure she keeps several in her locker. You'll about the same size. Let's go. We need it, the book needs it. Everything for the book, you know." He leaned forward and set his eyes on her. "Is there any good reason why you won't go with me, Constance? Is there a young man who might get the wrong impression?" Now he would know what he had wanted to know during the two weeks she had worked for him. Constance and young men or perhaps one young man. Often at night he had wondered where she was and several times he had thought of calling her. But so far Avis had kept his evenings occupied. Avis... Those green eyes would be greener still when Constance arrived at the club with him. Was he playing with fire? Oh, well, it was an amusing game but a game in which he would win. He had to win.

Color crept up Constance's cheeks. "The only young man who matters is away at camp. Terry and I are going to be married in October."

He dropped his cigaret on the grass and did not pick it up.

"You're engaged to be married?" "It hasn't been announced yet."

"Happy?" "Terribly and lucky, too."

"Terribly in love with him?" She nodded. She was glad he knew.

"Does he know he's lucky?" Gordon asked. His brown hand covered hers. "You know, you're new to me, Constance. I've never met anybody like you before. At last I've met a girl who has not plots and schemes in her heart but only love for the boy she is going to marry." And all at once he knew that he was falling a little in love with her...

"Let's go. Don't thank me for the compliment," he smiled. "And remember, Constance, that though I wear a black mustache, I'm no villain. Remember that."

A few minutes later her hair was blowing in the warm wind as they drove to the club.

The summer was not going to be as he had planned. The book, rather than being his chief interest, would be only a side issue. He swore to himself, thinking that for the past ten years of his life girls had always intruded upon his work and because of them he was where he was today, heavily in debt, out of a job, and ostracized by New York friends. How long would his pose as a rich man of leisure writing a book last? Only as long as no one from the Hills went to New York and heard the still-talked-of scandal.

What—no work today? she asked. "How come? Don't tell me it's because of the heat. Wait until August before you complain of that. Hello, Miss Darby. Is it swimming or tennis? I'm going in the pool as soon as I change."

She has been seeing the wealthy playboy, Van Howard. Constance warns her he is not serious and would never marry her. "I'll show you!" Rosalind retorted. "I'll show everybody!" While working for Gordon at the Carter Estate, Constance meets Avis Bailey, attractive, young debutante. The latter is obviously interested in the handsome Gordon. When Gordon says that some day he and Constance will play tennis with Avis and Van Howard, Constance is troubled. "I won't let myself become involved with these people," Van promises his mother that he will not see Rosalind again. The latter is broken-hearted when he does not come to their usual rendezvous. As the days go on, Gordon finds himself falling in love with Constance. Enroute to the exclusive Northwood Country Club with her for a swim, he swore to himself: Women had always interfered with his work. It was because of them he was in debt and shunned by his New York friends. Would Northwood learn of the scandal he was involved in?

CHAPTER IX

And of the two girls in whom he was interested only one was good for him. Avis. And her money. What a fool he was to think of Constance as anything but a short-hand-taking machine? Yes, a fool. But he had always been a fool about girls, a fool and to many a villain. At least, he thought, he knew his weaknesses and admitted them to himself. But only to himself. Northwood's high regard of him amused him bitterly. Small-town snobs! Let them honor him! But now what he wished for most was to be a returned hero to the lovely girl who now sat beside him.

"Tell me about your Terry," he said.

Her voice excited as it always was when she thought of Terry and spoke of him, Constance told him briefly of a love that had been mutual for as long as she could remember.

Then she said, "Van Howard has stopped seeing my sister. If it will make Mrs. Howard happier to know that, you may tell her." Thinking of Rosalind's thick choked voice in the darkness, she felt a twist in her heart. "If Van had stayed with the Hills crowd where he belongs, this would never have happened. It doesn't seem quite fair."

"Life would be simpler and much happier," Gordon said thoughtfully, "if small-town snobishness and small-town gossip could be eliminated. I belong to the club and you're my guest. If they look down their noses at you this afternoon, pay no attention."

And so for the second time in her life and this time as a guest she passed between the high iron gates of the exclusive Northwood Country Club.

Avis Bailey was standing on the broad steps of the clubhouse dressed in white shorts and a short-sleeved white sweater. Her legs and arms were brown. A white visitor over her red hair shielded her eyes from the hot June sun.

Recognizing the sleek black car, she walked toward it.

"What—no work today?" she asked. "How come? Don't tell me it's because of the heat. Wait until August before you complain of that. Hello, Miss Darby. Is it swimming or tennis? I'm going in the pool as soon as I change."

"Could you let Constance have a bathing suit?" Gordon asked. "We didn't want to drive all the way back to town for her to get hers. I told her you had a variety."

In her husky voice Avis said, "You shall have my prettiest suit, Miss Darby."

The bathroom was crowded with girls just out of the pool and those just about to go in. They looked at Constance with frank curiosity. Who was the strange, pretty girl who had come in with Avis, they wondered? But it was all right if she were with Avis. Anything Avis did was all right.

Avis opened the door of her cheerful friendliness in her attitude toward her. But with Gordon she was charmingly sarcastic. They swam and sat on the edge of the pool. When a group just arriving paused to speak, it was Avis who introduced Constance to them, but she did not tell them that she was Gordon's secretary. Avis Bailey kind and thoughtful? In the town it was said that Avis had a vicious temper and spared no one's feelings. Constance thought, "But I like her. She's curt and ironic and a little bitter but she's real and honest. She looks at things straight and clearly. She's a girl I could trust."

Coming up from her third time in

"Don't be a little fool and fall in love with him," Avis told Constance.

lecker and took out a blue satin bathing suit.

"This should be becoming to you." Then, looking directly at Constance, she narrowed her eyes and said, "Take a little advice from me and don't believe anything Gordon tells you. Don't trust him. Don't be a little fool and fall in love with him. I'm telling you this for your own good."

Constance opened her eyes wide. "I work for him. That's all there is to it."

"Good. See you in a few minutes." Was Avis jealous of her, she wondered as she undressed in the stifling cubicle? It was ridiculous. She wished that Terry were here to talk to.

Not waiting for Constance, Avis, wearing a white rubber bathing suit, met Gordon beside the sparkling pool.

"I didn't wait for her," she said curtly. "She'll find us." Then, "Gordon, she's a swell girl. Constance Darby, I mean."

His dark eyes narrowed. "Do you think she's worked for me for two weeks and I haven't discovered that yet?"

"Do you think I'm jealous? Well, I'm not!"

"Why should you be jealous of a mere secretary however beautiful? Constance is a sweet person but you are—well, you're you, Avis." He laughed. "Shall I make love to you before all these people to convince you?"

But her green eyes were unhappy. "I wish I could believe you. I could never come here with you again. If she makes a fool of herself, I shall."

"Do you think she will?" She shrugged. "I wish I'd gone abroad this summer. I shouldn't have stayed home." She smiled bitterly. "Years from now I'll look back and think 'How peaceful Northwood was until that summer Gordon Keith came back!'"

Constance, coming out of the bathroom, wondered what they were talking about.

Avis stayed with them all afternoon. Constance felt a detached but the water, she saw Van Howard talking with Gordon and Avis.

"This is Constance Darby," Gordon said. "I think you know her sister, Van."

A rush of color washed over his brown face. "Oh, sure. You're Rosalind's sister."

He left them and later when Constance came out of the bathroom alone, he was standing on the club steps. Seeing her, he came to her instantly.

"I'm glad I got the chance to see you alone," he said. "I—I wanted to speak to you about Rosalind."

Constance stood still, frowning a little in the sunlight.

TWO TILTS DECIDED IN LAST MINUTES OF PLAY

A large crowd was on hand last night as two fast games of the Bristol Basketball League were played on the Italian Mutual Aid court, Wood street. Both tilts were close and decided in the last few minutes of play. In the first encounter the Rohm & Haas five edged out the Celtics, 40-39, and in the second tilt, Fall Alumni bowed to the Celtics, 30-26.

"Jimmy" Lake missed a chance to be a hero in the opening fray. In the final second of play, Referee Henry Morgan detected Cahill fouling him, and even though the horn sounded, making the game into an extra period by making good. But the foul toss rebounded from the board, hit the out side rim and dropped, to give the Rohm & Haas the game by their one point margin.

"Johnny" Dougherty scored the winning double-deckers for the Celtics. He made two field goals at the opportune time and it was his two-point shot which put the Maple Beach ahead. On both of his field goals, "Dats" Pegley was credited with an assist.

The fact that Lake missed the foul which would have sent the game into an extra period did not dim any of the glory which the Celtics' rosters bestowed on him, for it was his shooting with the aid of Wilbur VanLenten which kept the boys of Vito Della in the game throughout. Lake scored 16 points to take the lead in the scoring department of the league. VanLenten had ten points.

High scorer for the winning combination was Ralph Cahill, former forward on the Williamson Trade School team. Cahill hit the cords for five field goals and made good on three of his six foul tries. Swadis and Weideman played well defensively.

Falls Alumni failed to hold a four point edge in the last five minutes of the game to lose to the Hibees. At the middle of the final quarter, the DeRist men were out in front, 24-20. Gallagher scored on a long shot and Dugan got one from under the basket to deadlock the count with four minutes remaining to be played. Lovett put the Falls team ahead with a foul toss, but Joe Snyder scored on a rebound from the back-board and the Hibees were out in front, 26-25. Snyder again scored for the Corson street boys and Joe Roe put the game on ice with another one from a dribble shot underneath the net. Lovett sank in another free shot but the game was over.

The points in this tilt were closely divided, but the foul-shooting of Freddie Briegle and Bill Lovett stood out. Lovett getting three out of three and Briegle four out of five. Gallagher was high for the Hibees with eight points.

Monday night, Falls Alumni meets St. Ann's, and Rohm & Haas clashes with Manhattan.

Czech children, and these in schools supported by the Government." Dr. Lowrie cited numerous instances of German equality. "There were 249 German newspapers in the country. They had their own unions, theatres and cultural organizations, as well as political, and enjoyed the protection of the State until Henlein fled the country," he said.

The claim that the Germans did not have a proportional representative in governmental jobs he called still another myth.

"While this is true considering the Federal jobs," he said, "in the local Sudeten municipal government they far outnumbered the Czechs. In one town I visited, there were more than 100 Germans with jobs, and only four Czechs, though 18 per cent of the local population were Czechs."

Dr. Lowrie explained the economic depression which affected the Sudeten areas more than the rest of the country as being due to non-political factors.

He pointed out that the maintenance of a balanced budget required that 35 per cent of the national production be exported. These exports came mainly from the Sudeten areas.

Glass, ceramics and textile made up the major portion of these export industries and being luxury articles they were the first to suffer as a result of the world depression.

Immediately after the war the German manufacturers in the Sudeten areas invested much of their earnings in German marks which meant that they incurred a great loss of capital when German inflation came.

"And this," he said, "was done as a part of the general German feeling up to 1926 to refuse to recognize the new Republic."

Dr. Lowrie emphasized that most Sudetens never wanted to be annexed to the Reich. "If anything," they would have liked to be attached to Austria, the old Austria," he said.

Pointing to German domination the Foundation head stated that for more than 200 years up to the World War, the Czechs lived under the domination of the Germans.

"And I really mean under," he exclaimed, adding, "if since the war there has been a turnabout, where Czechs dominated Germans, it is quite understandable."

He protested that 20 years was too short a time in which to perfect the governmental functions of a country and asked that this too, be considered in weighing the German persecution claims.

In conclusion, Dr. Lowrie expressed his deep relief that war had been averted but warned, "we should not blind ourselves to the actual situations that still exist, the objectives of the Nazi Government."
